

Rogers-Herr Middle School is proud to be National Middle Schools to Watch winner every year since 2008. This recognition has been achieved by just 26 middle schools in North Carolina since the program began here in 2203. Schools that earn this distinction are found to be:

- Academically excellent– these schools challenge all students to user their minds well
- Developmentally responsive– these schools are sensitive to the unique developmental challenges of early adolescence.
- Socially equitable– these schools are democratic and fair, providing every student with high-quality teachers, resources and supports.

History

Rogers-Herr was founded in 1967 by life-long Durham teachers Maude Rogers and Marguerite Herr. Our school began as a sixth grade center, and finally transitioned to a year-round middle school in 2000. A multi-million dollar renovation project to the facility was completed in 2005, giving us beautiful, updated facilities.

Our Teachers

Rogers-Herr has fewer than 650 students. Benefiting from a smaller class size, our highly trained faculty is able to focus on your child's needs in order to attain the knowledge and skills needed to stay competitive in high school and beyond. Many teachers offer tutorials after school, providing a time in which students may have extra help with their homework. Encouraging and kind, our teachers push students to do their best while fostering a caring and safe environment.
